Weekly Market Recap

After all-time highs, stocks faded on weak jobs data, a drop in consumer confidence, and a looming clash over taxes. The S&P 500 rose 0.62% (a seven-month win streak) as investors weighed whether a hiring slowdown would spur the Federal Reserve to delay its planned stimulus reduction. The U.S. added 235,000 jobs in August, a seven-month low amid supply chain and labor constraints from resurgent COVID-19 cases. European Central Bank officials signaled a move to taper monetary policy; Global Stocks gained 2.27%. Emerging Markets rallied 3.42% (back-to-back wins). U.S. Senate Democrats mulled new tax proposals including levies on stock buybacks, carbon emissions and executive compensation, prompting investors to scrutinize the debate on President Joe Biden's $3.5 trillion economic plan. The U.S. 10-Year Treasury Yield rose to 1.32% on losses in European sovereign bonds; the dollar was steady. China announced its Central Bank will provide $46.4 billion in low-cost funding for small firms, hoping easier money will bolster the economy.
